RETAILER EDUCATION SPOTLIGHT

LET'S TALK INGREDIENTS:

Herbs that work together

Dong Quai Root: The phytochemicals within this plant are said to help support the body in white blood cell production. Studies show it may help the body's ability to naturally dilate the bronchioles to support open airways and encourage circulation to the lungs and respiratory system. In addition, it contains small amounts of vitamins A and E, biotin, carotene, and pantothenic acid.

Chinese Asparagus Root: Commonly known as the "Queen" of herbs due to its wide range of effective properties, it is recognized as a lung tonic due to its ability to help support the body by moistening and gently cleansing the lungs and respiratory tissues.

Chinese Skullcap Root: This herb is one of the most widely-used herbs in Chinese medicine, particularly as support for the bronchioles and the larger respiratory system. Skullcap contains compounds that support the body's balanced inflammatory response, encourage natural immune function, and promote healthy urine flow, bile production, and more.

Ophiopogon Root: Ophiopogon root is a traditional Chinese medicinal herb used for centuries for its many benefits. It is a tonic for the yin, which helps nourish and balance the body's energy. Ophiopogon root is also known for its antioxidant properties and its ability to support a balanced, calm inflammation response. It is especially beneficial for the respiratory system, the digestive system, and the immune system.

Poria Fungal Body: This herb contains multiple vitamins and other nutrients essential to healthy cardiac function and blood circulation. It is used in TCM to rid the body of excess "dampness." In this process, it helps balance electrolytes and revitalizes the spleen, which is responsible for storing half of the body's white blood cells (monocytes). This supports the immune system and helps it function properly.
